

1. Internet options for students without home access

- a. Low-income internet service providers

<https://www.cheapinternet.com/low-income-internet>

- b. PCs for People Unlimited Sprint data plan

“Offering $10/Month unlimited LTE data for low-income households”

<https://www.rvmobileinternet.com/pcs-for-people-offering-10month-unlimited-lte-data-for-low-income-households/>

- c. Spectrum Internet Assist (Spectrum Cable Discounted Service)

“Get high-speed internet at an affordable price. Spectrum Internet Assist is available exclusively to qualified households”

<https://www.spectrum.com/browse/content/spectrum-internet-assist.html>

- d. Cincinnati Bell Lifeline Program (Cincinnati Bell DSL Discounted Service)

“Lifeline is a federal supported benefit for qualifying low-income consumers. Qualifying consumers receive discounted services on either their voice telephone service or qualifying internet service”

www.cincinnati-bell.com/lifeline

- e. Mobile Beacon (Hotspot)

<https://www.mobilebeacon.org/>

- f. Cox

- i. “Low-income internet - Cox program #1 – for families participating in SNAP, TANF and the National School Lunch Program

- ii. If you live in areas of the country served by Cox and you qualify under their rules, you can now get their Low-Income Internet for just $9.95 per month instead of the much higher subscription rates the company typically charges for its lowest cost introductory plan”

<https://www.cheapinternet.com/low-income-internet/cox>

- g. Frontier

“Here’s how it works: Frontier intro plan starts at about $20 per month. Then they apply a monthly Lifeline discount of $9.25 per month, which reduces your price to about $10 per month. That makes Frontier’s price competitive with other low-income programs such as Comcast’s Internet Essentials”

<https://www.cheapinternet.com/low-income-internet/frontier-communications-offers-low-income-internet-for-10-per-month>

h. Everyone On

“The Lifeline benefit is another tool in the digital inclusion toolbox to help your constituents get online. A $9.25 per month subsidy to offset or completely cover broadband costs, the Lifeline benefit is available to individuals in certain federal benefit programs”

<https://www.everyoneon.org/find-offers>